¹ Corporate memberships refer to the memberships with trade associations that are maintained by T. Rowe Price as a corporate entity. The individual memberships of individual employees of T. Rowe Price are not included in this definition.

² T. Rowe Price defines “trade associations” as industry trade groups, business or sector associations, and other organizations that are focused primarily on promoting the specific interests of its members, and providing a forum for collaboration between member entities. We do not consider organizations that are primarily focused on providing certifications, or on providing educational opportunities for its members as trade associations.
